Note. A collection of six elegies pub. under his name are the productions of Maximianus. There are in the Latin Anthology four epigrams which were formerly attributed to Gallus, but none of these can have been the production of a contemporary of Augustus. Some critics attribute to him the poem of Ciris, usually printed among the works of Virgil, but the arguments do not appear satisfactory. — L. Schmitz in Smith's Dict. Gr. and Rom. biog.

(Papers.)

— Sessional papers, 1783–1843, 53–67. London, 1783–1867.] 1264 v. mostly f°.

Note. The sessional papers, since the year 1835, have been arranged in the following divisions: 1. Bills public; 2. Reports from committees; 3. Reports from commissioners; 4. Accounts and papers. In 1812–34 the arrangement varied somewhat from year to year, but corresponded in general with that which has since become established. Before 1812 comparatively few papers were published, and apparently no classification of them was attempted. For the greater part of the series, general title-pages and tables of contents are found, specifying all or the most important subjects in each volume or in each general division.

The separate papers in this collection have not generally been entered under their various subjects in the present catalogue. They can be used by the aid of the index given in the Boston Public Library catalogue and supplement (Bates Hall). Beside the imperfect set catalogued above, the Athenæum has various separate reports, papers, etc., (enumerated below or under House of Commons or House of Lords or under the certain departments of government) which have for the most part been entered under their proper subjects.

In the following list, after the general histories, are placed those which cover several reigns, arranged as far as possible, chronologically. Lives of the kings and queens and the histories of single reigns should be sought under the names of the sovereigns in the main alphabet. Beginning with the Stuarts, however, a number of accounts of events in single reigns have been given here.
